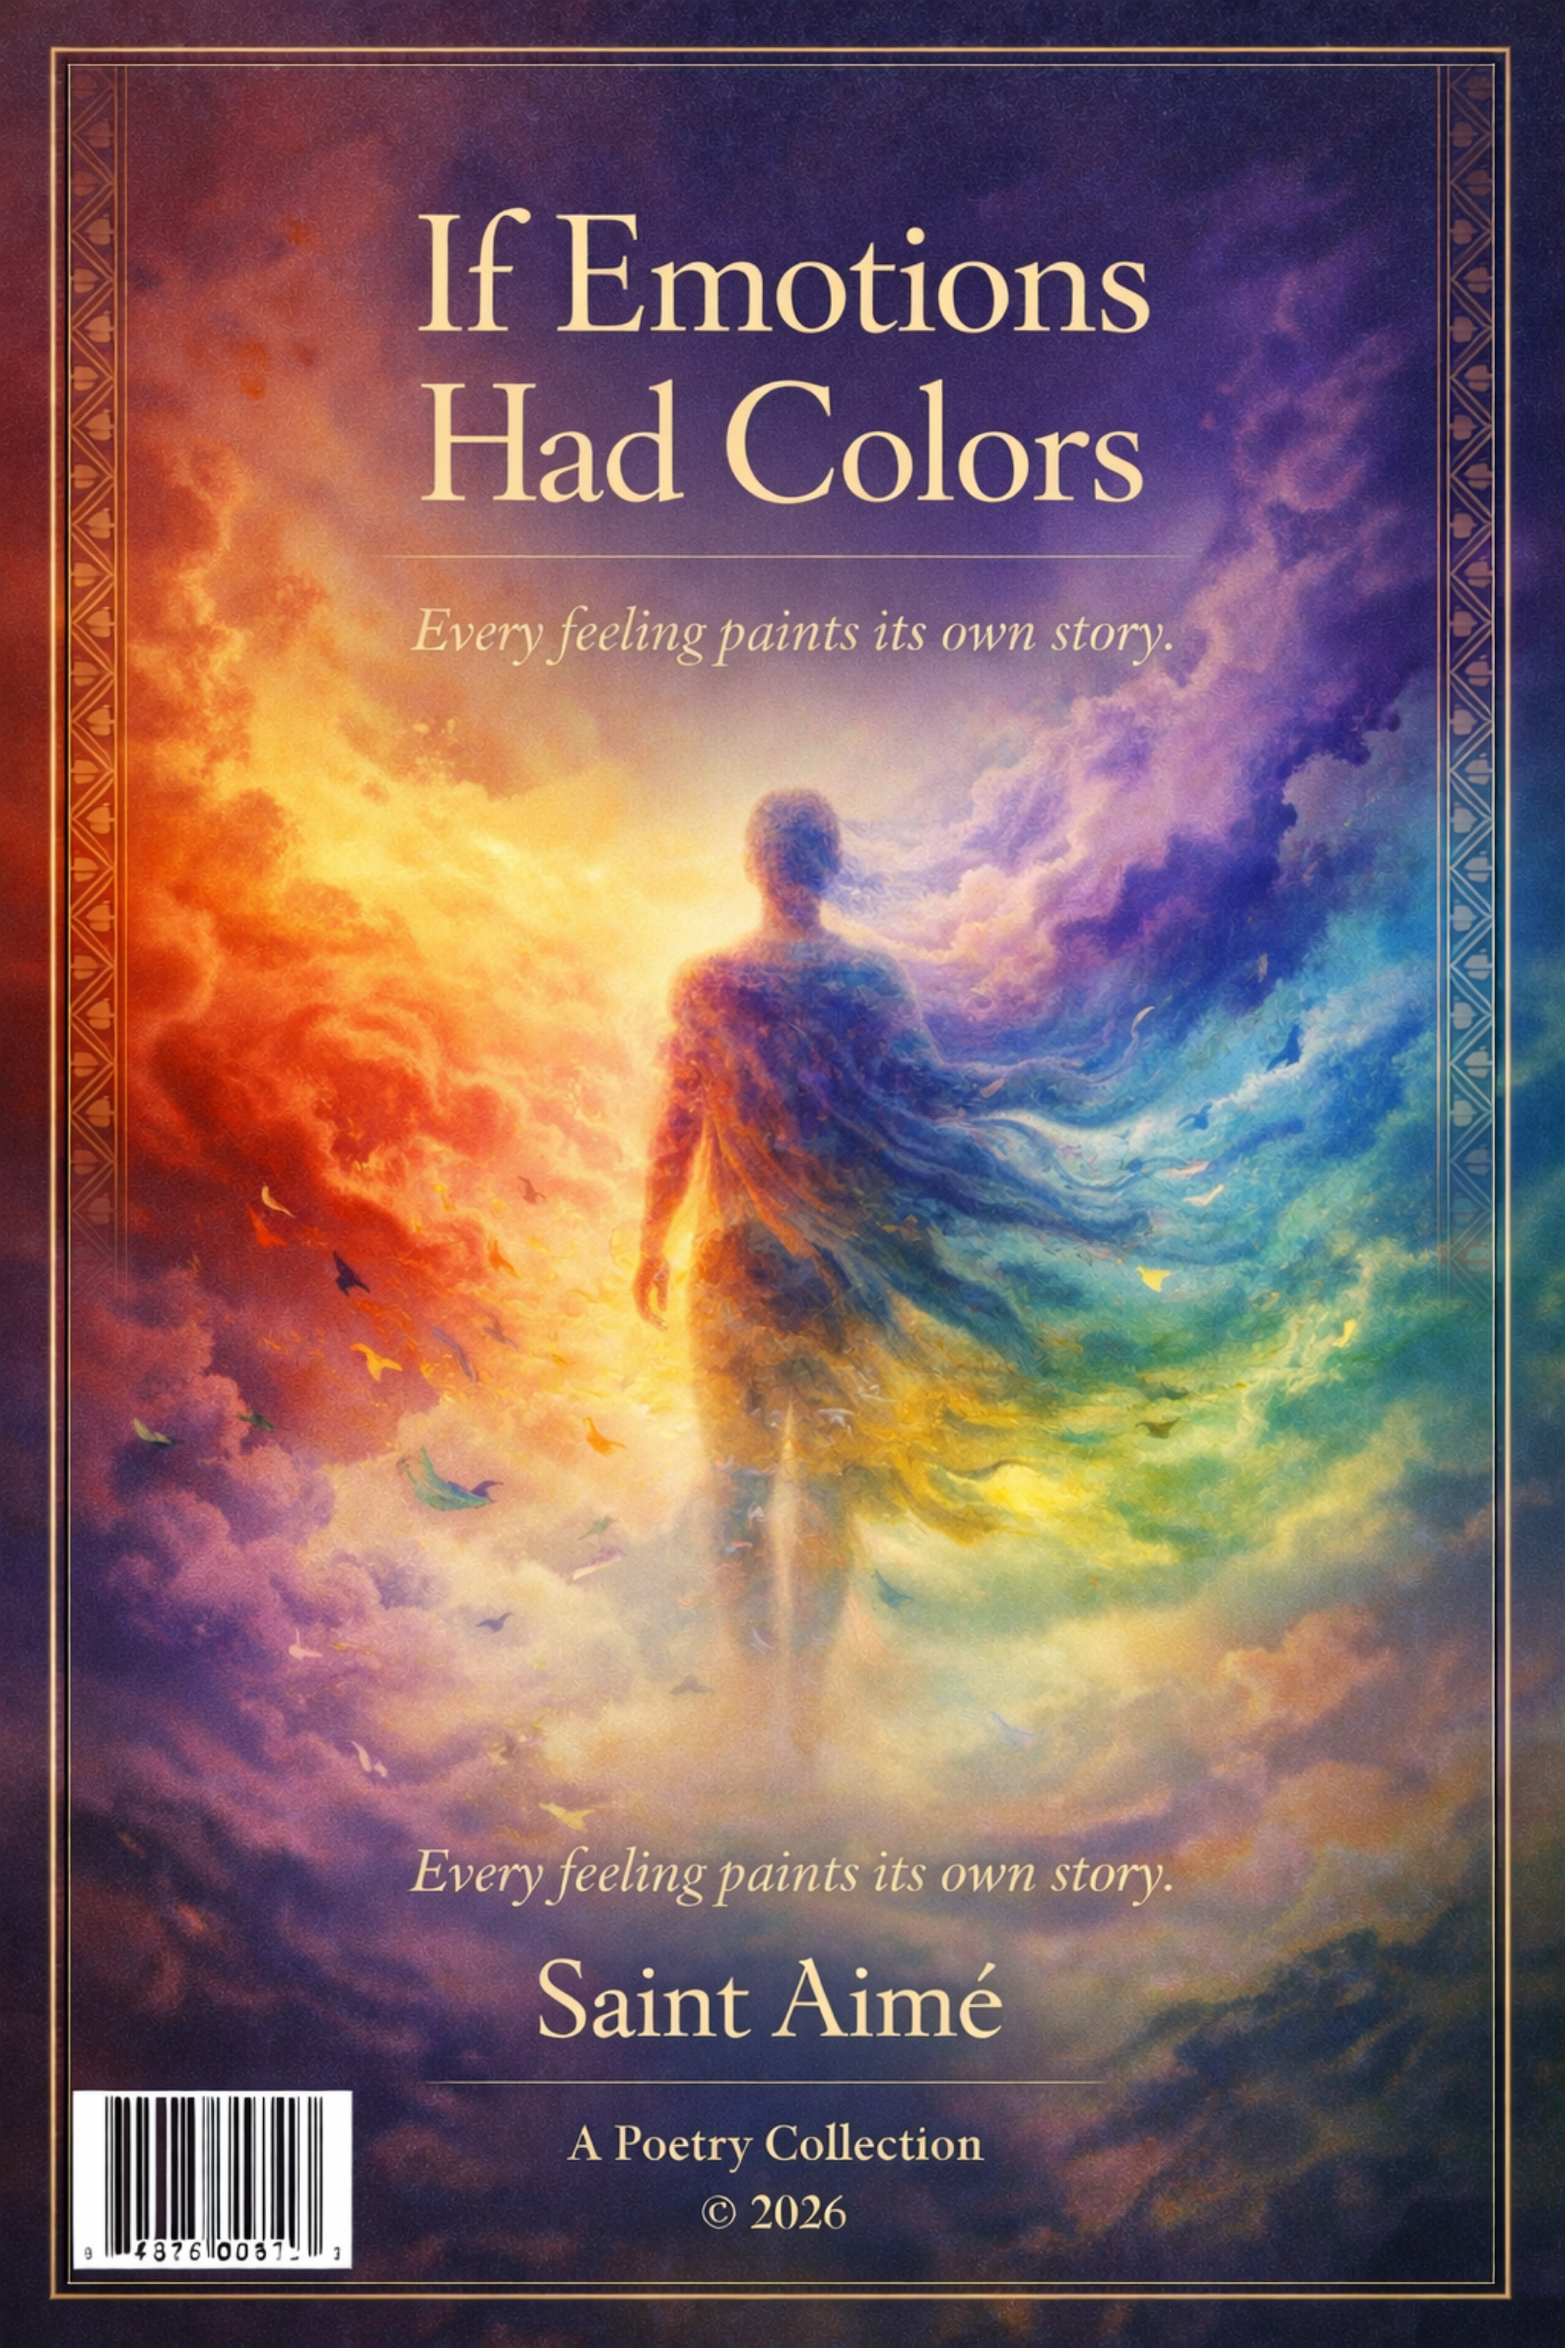
If Emotions Had Colors

Every feeling paints its own story.



Every feeling paints its own story.

Saint Aimé

A Poetry Collection

© 2026

Table of contents

1. If emotions had Colors

If emotions had Colors

If Emotions Had Colors

If emotions had colors,
the world would finally understand me, they would understand my emotions.

They would see how layered a single heart can be.
Love would glow in deep blue color,
steady and calming,
while fear would flicker in gray,
uncertain and cold.

Pain would burn in red,
impossible to ignore but always appears
But hope would always appear in green, quietly growing where it is least expected.

Healing would shine in gold—
not loud, not fast,
but precious and real,
earned through time.